APRIL VOICES.

BY WILLIE E. PABOR.

It was a voice of a fountain fa r Horne on the wings of the mountain mir;
And this was the sease of the liquid lay
Borne to my ears at the dawn of day:
"A little bird with a bright red breast,
Is gathering things to build a nest;
And one—so gay in a coat of blue,
Sits singing his song, the young hours through."

It was the voice of the violet Hardly unfolding its blue leaves yet;
And this was the sense of the floral lay
Borne to my ear- at the close of day;
"I heard when the stops of Spring came righ,
I heard her tell of the bright blue sky And came to see if the earth looked fair, And the song of birds upon the air."

It was the voice of a stream let free Chouning its motion right mercily.
And this was the sense of the ripling lay Borne to my e ratthe close of day:

"My fetters are toosed, I'm free once more
To kirs the sand on the sloping shore;
To da ce along in my merry slee
And half the sun as I seek the sea."

Wherever I went, go far or hear Musical voice fell on my ear; And this was the sense of each roundely Borne to my ears through the hours of day; "Ev'n as a bride at the alter appears, Apr. is here with her sinites and tears; With her sweet, soft winds from fragrant bowers With her budding trees and blooming fl. wers."

down" Beaumarchais, originally a watchmaker, but afterwards the music-master and faverite of the royal daughters of Louis Quinze, stopped him one day in the midst of a large group of persons, when he was just coming out of the royal apartments in court dress, and presented a superb watch to him.

"Sir," said the courtier, "since you know all about watchmaking, would you be kind enough just to look at my watch? It is out of order.' "Sir," quietly replied Beaumarchais, "since I have given up attending to watches, I have become very awkward." "Pray, sir, do not refuse to oblige me." "As you will; but I warn you that I am very awkward."

On this he took the watch, held it up, under pretext of examining it, and let it drop on the

Rogers relates that he once dined with Curran in the public room of the chief inn at Greenwich, when he talked a great deal, and as usual, with considerable exaggeration. Speaking of something which he would not do on any inducement, he exclaimed vehe-

"I had rather be hanged upon twenty gibbets."

"Don't you think, sir, that one would be enough for you?" said a girl, a stranger, who was sitting at a table next to them. I wish (says Rogers) you could have seen Curran's face. He was absolutely confounded,

When the English and French ambassadors likened their kings to the sun and the moon, Dr. Franklin compared Washington to Joshua, who commanded the sun and moon to stand still, and they obeyed him. Quite as good w thing has been said by the Circassian hero, Schamyl. When the Russians called upon him to lay down his arms, declaring, "The armies which we send against you are as the sands on the seashore, innumerable," he replied, "Our hosts are like the waves of the ses, which wash away the sands and destroy them."
